CBC News, CTV and Global have been denied access to an informational panel that will happen at the World Islamic Economic Forum (WEF) in Canada this week. The panel, titled "Bill C-51: How to Rebuild Free Trade & Cooperation," includes experts from the United States and Canada. Organizers said the leaders of the Global Islamic Advisory Council and the Canadian Council of Imams are the main organizers of the conference and that the panel is intended to be "an open and frank discussion" about the impact of the 2015 Bill C-51 that changed the rules of engagement for foreign nationals and about how free trade has been a factor of peace in the international community. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service says the panel is a "softball" event that will focus on the values of free trade. Global will air a rebroadcast of the panel at 5:30 p.m. ET, one hour after the initial CBC, CTV and Global reports. Transparency denied "The WEF is a global organization aimed at bringing together academics, policy experts, political leaders and business leaders to provide a platform for critical discussion of the broad range of issues facing the world today," said WEF VP of security, policy and risk management Daryoush Farshid. "It is unfortunate that the CBC, CTV and Global have not been able to gain access to the event in its entirety, as well as those who seek to share in the discussion. Canada and the United States are deeply committed to free trade and to promoting economic growth and prosperity through robust engagement with the rest of the world. That has been demonstrated over many years, and today is no different." The WEF says the panel will be live streamed on their website Monday. {"created_at": "2015-02-27T22:27:34.961047", "description": "A JavaScript Text Editor.", "fork": false, "full_name": "modauro/mate", "language": "JavaScript", "updated_

Please note that...A comparison of the effects of oral contraceptives and a short course of high-dose estrogen on liver enzyme levels. We studied a group of 172 women receiving long-term oral contraceptive therapy (100 women) or a short course of high-dose estrogen therapy (72 women) to determine whether these therapies were associated with liver enzyme elevations. The groups were comparable with respect to age and body weight and were comparable with respect to the route, type and duration of estrogen use. Liver transaminase levels (except alkaline phosphatase) were uniformly elevated in the contraceptive group (S.E. 1.15 IU/l for alanine aminotransferase [ALT], 0.45 for aspartate aminotransferase [AST]). The mean ALT and AST values for the estrogen group (S.E. 0.91 and 0.53 IU/l, respectively) were similar to those for the contraceptive group. The ALT level in 35 of the 72 women (48%) in the estrogen group and in 22 of the 100 women (22%) in the contraceptive group exceeded the normal limit for their age. Elevations of ALT and AST occurred in all women in the estrogen group who had been on the therapy for less than 2 months (median, 2 months). ALT and AST elevations were also observed in 15 of the 66 women (22%) in the contraceptive group and in 11 of the 66 women (17%) who had been taking the same regimen for 5 years or longer. In all cases, the elevations of ALT and AST were unrelated to the duration of therapy or to the type of estrogen used. The ALT level of three women (2.4%) receiving combination therapy exceeded 50 IU/l.(ABSTRACT TRUN
