Elec. Mater." I was curious about the usage of the "e" in "Gen. Elec. Mater." Wikipedia says "The adjective is used only in "gen. elec.", and means "of or relating to general electricity". The e is not used in the original Latin (De Electrica), which appeared in book 1 of the 1st edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. My question is why it's there, if it's not for some sort of grammatical reason, but for some historical reason? A: The "e" in "gen. elec." is not a Latin neuter indefinite article, as some have suggested, or even a classical Latinate feminine article, as others have proposed. It is neither. The "e" in "gen. elec." is simply a typical English possessive article that occurs after a personal (gen. or pl. rather than abl.) or reflexive (reflexive adjective rather than an independent adjective) noun in the singular and in the plural. It is almost certainly a very late addition to English, probably around 1400 CE, but it may have been in use in Britain as early as the 11th century. In the 11th century it was used as an old-fashioned form of the modern possessive articles "my" or "our
