The study demonstrates that mutations in a mouse gene called fndc5 can cause severe vision loss. The findings raise the possibility that many inherited eye disorders might have a common genetic origin. The research has been published online in the journal Cell. "Vision is one of the most important senses to humans," says co-researcher Pierre Larochelle, an Associate Professor in the Department of Neuroscience at Université de Montréal and a researcher in the laboratory of Joe Gall at the Centre de Recherche des Instituts de Santé Mentale de Montréal (CRI-ISMMT).
