Sammy Ture, South Wales Evening Post An engineer walks near the site of where a train was left on the line following a vehicle attack in Old Town, Birmingham, UK, Thursday, March 26, 2017. Two car thieves have been arrested after they drove their vehicle onto the railway tracks and tried to drive off a London bound train. (Photo: Birmingham Mail) A man was arrested on suspicion of attempted burglary after he drove his van onto the railway tracks near Old Town, Birmingham, on Thursday afternoon and tried to drive off a London bound train. The incident happened just before 3.50pm when a Great Western Railway train was travelling from London Paddington to Birmingham. Two of the train's passengers were not injured but the engineer was in the cab as the train was driving from New Street. The driver was taken to hospital with injuries he is said to have incurred during the incident. One of the offenders has been arrested. The second is still at large. Police are appealing for anyone with information or dashcam footage to come forward. A CID spokesman said: "Inquiries are ongoing to identify the driver of the vehicle, which is being spoken to by detectives. "It is believed two offenders entered the car in Birmingham, and drove onto the railway tracks. They then got out of the vehicle and tried to drive off. "It is believed one occupant was in the vehicle during the incident, but it is not known if they were in the cab or the boot at the time, or if they were in the back of the vehicle. "An argument ensued between the two people in the cab and driver and at least one person used a hammer to break out the window. The motive for the offence is not known." The area will be closed for most of Friday,
