The following conclusions can be drawn from this study:--The different structures of the perivascular sheaths of the various soft tissue masses differ from each other. Some share common features, but in other cases specific features can be identified. These features involve the origin and the nature of the connective tissue components of the perivascular sheaths. The perivascular sheaths of tumours are due to accumulation of connective tissue, usually composed of dense bundles of finely fibrillated collagen. They vary in diameter from 0.1 mm to 1.0 mm (in volume) in different species. They are not innervated and cannot
