9/27/17 Can asymptomatic cutaneous lesions be the first symptom of leptospirosis?

Leptospirosis is an important zoonosis with an expanding range, and it is important to recognize the typical cutaneous manifestations in order to suspect and identify this infection. Some cases of leptospirosis mimicking cutaneous lesions have been reported in the literature. We report a case of an asymptomatic cutaneous lesion that clinically mimicked a necrotizing vasculitis and subsequently was confirmed as leptospirosis. The patient was a 37-year-old caucasian male worker presenting with a 4-day history of a skin lesion localized to the right shoulder. The lesion was painless, had inflammatory evolution, and was associated with weight loss, nausea, vomiting, and a productive cough. Cultures of the lesion revealed Gram-negative rods (Pseudomonas spp.) and subsequent serologic tests for leptospirosis resulted negative. The leptospirosis diagnosis was subsequently confirmed with polymerase chain reaction from the serum. Leptospirosis should be considered in patients presenting with cutaneous lesions, especially when there are some associated risk factors. Q: How many coins do you need to earn a USD amount by trading in Bitcoin? I am interested in how many Bitcoins do you need to buy 1 USD of Bitcoin if you were to exchange c6a93da74d
