What's New in the?

Publisher is a structured document authoring tool designed to help a team of authors work collaboratively on the creation of structured documents. The tool focuses on the creation of technical, business, and reference documents by automating many of the tasks associated with creating and maintaining structured documents. The Publisher system includes a simple to use graphical interface, a set of extensive features, and an XML-based scripting language. The system is built around the Eclipse RCP framework and the Eclipse Modeling Framework (EMF). Publisher can be customized to use other tools if the user wishes. For example, the prototype product uses Ant as its build system but this is not required. Publisher can be run as a stand-alone application, on a local file system, or on the web. Publishers built on the web can be dynamically connected to the web server to be available to a large number of concurrent users. Requirements: □ Java Virtual Machine □
